RELATED RISKS

- The prices of the equity may fluctuate significantly as they depend on general economic and political circumstances.
- Derivatives contain special risks arising from the so-called leverage effect. For Total Return Swaps that do not involve physical holding of securities, synthetic replication through fully funded (or unfunded) Total Return Swaps may provide a means of obtaining exposure to strategies that are difficult to implement, and which would otherwise be very expensive and difficult to access with physical replication. However, synthetic replication involves a counterparty risk.
- Transactions on OTC markets may expose a given Sub-Fund to risks about the credit status of its counterparties and their capacity to meet the conditions of such agreements.
- CLOs are subject to the risk of default by the underlying borrowers, which can impact the performance of the securities.
- Changes in carbon credit prices can affect the value of carbon notes significantly, impacting their profitability. There is a possibility that the entities backing the carbon credits fail to fulfill their obligations, leading to losses. Issues in measurement, reporting, and verification of carbon reduction efforts can impact the validity of carbon notes.

PROFILE OF POTENTIAL INVESTORS

- This share class is open for retail investors.
- An investment in this Sub-Fund is suitable only for investors who are able to appraise the risks and economic value of the investment.
- The investor must be prepared to accept a medium volatility of the Sub-Fund and potentially capital losses in order to achieve moderate potential investment performances.
- The sub-fund is intended for investors with a medium-term investment horizon

GLOSSARY OF TECHNICAL TERMS

- Derivatives: In the broadest sense, a derivative is a financial instrument whose price or value is calculated in relation to other market-traded assets or instruments. These other assets or instruments are called “underlyings” and may include indices, interest rates, government bonds, shares or commodities such as gold or oil. Derivatives are regarded as speculative instruments and might be highly volatile, that is why potential gains or losses might be very high. Due to their nature they can also be used as hedges against the risk of volatility of the underlying assets. Derivatives are widely traded in the over-the-counter market, outside of the scope of standard market regulations enacted by market supervisors, thus both parties negotiate freely and directly the type of contract and the relevant terms and conditions. The most common derivatives include futures, options, warrants and swaps.
- Options: Options are derivative financial instruments which, for a premium, give the holder the right to buy or sell, on a given date, an asset (called underlying) at a pre-established strike price. The option that gives the holder the right to buy the asset is referred to as call option. The call option holder expects prices to rise. On the other hand, if the investor believes that prices are falling, he can buy a put option which, (for a premium) will give him the right to sell the underlying at the strike price at the given date.
- Total Return Swaps: In finance, a total return swap (TRS), total rate of return swap (TRORS), or cash-settled equity swap is a financial contract that transfers both the credit risk and market risk of an underlying asset. A Total Return Swap is a contract between two parties who exchange the return from a financial asset between them. In this agreement, one party makes payments based on a set rate while the other party makes payments based on the total return of an underlying asset.
- OTC: Over The Counter derivatives are financial instruments that are traded directly between two parties. They are not listed on any central exchange or otherwise made publicly available.
- Put: A put option is a financial contract giving the owner the right but not the obligation to sell a pre-set amount of the underlying financial instrument at a pre-set price (strike price) with a pre-set maturity date.
- A carbon note is a financial instrument designed to represent a claim to a specified amount of carbon credits. These credits are generated when entities (such as businesses or projects) implement measures that reduce greenhouse gas emissions.
- CLO: Collateralised Loan Obligation. A particular type of asset-backed securities (ABS) in which the underlying portfolio consists of bank loans.
